Modus launches 'VWork' during Clerkenwell Design Week

Modus is delighted to launch the evolved VWork by Simon Pengelly for Clerkenwell Design Week

21-23 May 2019
28-29 Great Sutton Street
London EC1V 0DS

VWork by Simon Pengelly

Originally created as a simple yet versatile dining table, the VTable was the very first collaboration between Simon Pengelly and Modus back in 2000. Nineteen years on, its combination of honest materials and functional design has proven timeless, leading to a comprehensive extension into a workspace collection, VWork.

Named after its distinctive v-shaped joinery, VWork's seemingly simple feature allows for fluidity in the expansion, naturally lending itself to support a range of deeper tops as well as integrated cable management. As well as functional, the collection provides a much-needed flexible furnishing solution and is available in a number of configuration options.

The residential design roots of VWork along with the use of natural materials brings a soft aesthetic to the range. "Workplaces are evolving to offer a more relaxed and domestic atmosphere. They're an extension of the home where individuals are enabled to work in the way they want," commented Simon Pengelly, designer.

The range is also fully responsive to social demands within the workplace, with options to configure for collaborative or individual working. "The workplace environment is becoming far less formal with flexible working - and supplying furniture that allows for this is now essential," continued Pengelly.

The extended collection provides a fully comprehensive workspace solution, consisting of a modular table system, a hot desk with accessible power, meeting tables and matching benches and a high table available in three different lengths - all of which use the same design principles established for the original dining table. All tables are available with complementary accessories, including sleek screen dividers which come upholstered or in cork, as well as power and data solutions and a cable management tidy.

See the collection, during Clerkenwell Design Week, at the Modus showroom located in the heart of the festival.
